To truly know the Mali people of the Baining tribe, one can study their culture, political, economic, and social life. One aspect of the culture of the Mali-Bainings is the language and expressions they use daily to communicate and inter-relate with each other, their God, and nature around them.

Attempts were made in the early 1920s by an anthropologist and linguist priest, Fr Alphonse Mayerhofer to print the Mali language. He published a Catholic hymn book and a Catholic prayer and catechism book in the Mali language. These are being used today. There has been some reprinting of these for today's generation.

Obviously, to come up with the written form of the Mali language, a dictionary would serve as the basis for the explanation, interpretation, definitions, and pronunciation of words and phrases. It is of fundamental importance to the Mali people of future years and of equal importance to non-Malis interested in knowing about the Mali people through understanding and speaking their language.

Province, Papua New Guinea, I am really proud to see a dictionary in my own Mali-Baining language. And I take this opportunity to thank Tonya Stebbins. I thank, too, her husband Mark Planigale for his assistance.

The work would have been difficult had it not been for the close assistance of village elder, interpreter, and advisor Julius Tayul. I acknowledge the assistance of Marunga Elementary teachers Henry Lemka and Christophe Tayul and many others who contributed by submitting stories and assistance in kind.

With the completion of the dictionary I call on all good Mali-Bainings to use the dictionary with pride.

General acknowledgements

Two people who have been central to the completion of this dictionary are my husband Mark Planigale and our very good friend Mr Julius Tayul. Without Julius Tayul it would have been impossible to compile such a wonderful corpus from which to build the dictionary and to ensure that each entry was as complete and accurate as possible. I could not have asked for a more generous, patient, or persistent partner in my research on the language than gumamēk, ma Julius Tayul. Without Mark I would never have been brave enough to embark on this project and am not sure that I would have been able to see it through. I would also like to acknowledge the contribution Mark made to the dictionary by taking on the task of eliciting words in the domains of flora and fauna. Very few of these words would have made it into the dictionary without his dedicated efforts in this area since these words did not crop up in other parts of the corpus.

I would also like to specifically thank several other members of the Mali community who contributed directly to the dictionary. Julien Tayul deserves special mention for all of the example sentences she wrote. Others who helped with this task were: Julius Tayul Jnr, Henry Lemka, Christopher Tayul, Norberta Robert, Catherine Vasek and Charles Vasek. Many others contributed to the research that led to the dictionary by writing or recording stories in Mali. The support of the Mali community as a whole, and particularly in the village of Marunga, was also very important to this project. Without the help and practical support many people in Marunga provided, we would not have been able to complete this work.

Closer to home, I thank Jo Taylor and Bev Stebbins who assisted with the coding associated with compiling the electronic version of the dictionary. Meifang Gu provided the technical expertise that moved the Toolbox database through LexiquePro and into a word document and Alison Bennett made a huge contribution to formatting and proof-checking in the final stages. Thanks to Jeanette Coombes for typesetting the manuscript when it arrived at Pacific Linguistics.

It is a great honour to be the first contributor to Studies in the Languages of Island Melanesia. Thanks to Alex François for inviting me to be part of this series and for the great care he has taken in ensuring the final appearance of the dictionary matches the value that the Mali people place on their language.

I would like to acknowledge the financial support of La Trobe University through a Postdoctoral Fellowship in 2001–03. Particular thanks are due to Sasha Aikhenvald and Bob Dixon at the Research Centre for Linguistic Typology at La Trobe University, who provided the generous encouragement and practical support that made fieldwork in East New Britain possible. Thanks is also due to the Faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences at La Trobe University who funded an additional fieldtrip to make final checks to the dictionary in 2006.

About this dictionary

This is a dictionary of the Mali (Baining) language. It is presented in three parts. The first section, Mali-English, contains entries organised around Mali headwords. This section represents the Mali lexicon with English glosses and bilingual example sentences. Other information about particular word classes, for example the inflectional forms of verbs and the plural forms of nouns is also given here. (See §3.1 on word class labels for further information on how each category is represented. This information is expanded in the Mali (Baining) grammar, also published by Pacific Linguistics.) Many Mali words have alternate forms depending on their phonetic context or grammatical value. The Mali-English section lists alternate forms in addition to the citation form where complete information is given.

The English-Mali section contains much of the same information about the language as the Mali-English section but it is organised in relation to English translations for Mali words. This section is designed to facilitate use by people who are not familiar with Mali. This version of the dictionary was compiled manually, rather than being generated mechanically, with the intention of maximising the likelihood that the reader will be able to find the best match for an English word. The thesaurus is organised into semantic groups — see the guide at the start of that section for details. The thesaurus only indicates the sense of a word that is relevant for each particular semantic category. The reader should consult the Mali-English section in order to ascertain other related senses and thus the broader semantic possibilities of each word.

1.1 Development of the dictionary

During fieldwork in Papua New Guinea in 2001 and 2002, I worked on the three related tasks of compiling a corpus of Mali texts, doing preliminary grammatical analysis, and preparing a draft dictionary of the language. A more detailed account of the fieldwork and the resulting corpus is set out in the Mali-Baining grammar (Stebbins 2011) in §1.8-§1.9. The remote location and difficult physical conditions made on-going use of a laptop in the field impractical and so I made the decision to work from paper while in the field after the first trip. This dictionary started life as a card file.

The corpus of Mali texts I collected during this time eventually included over 60 texts, some recorded and transcribed by Julius Tayul, and others written down by the authors. As I worked through the texts with Mr Tayul, I built up the card file.

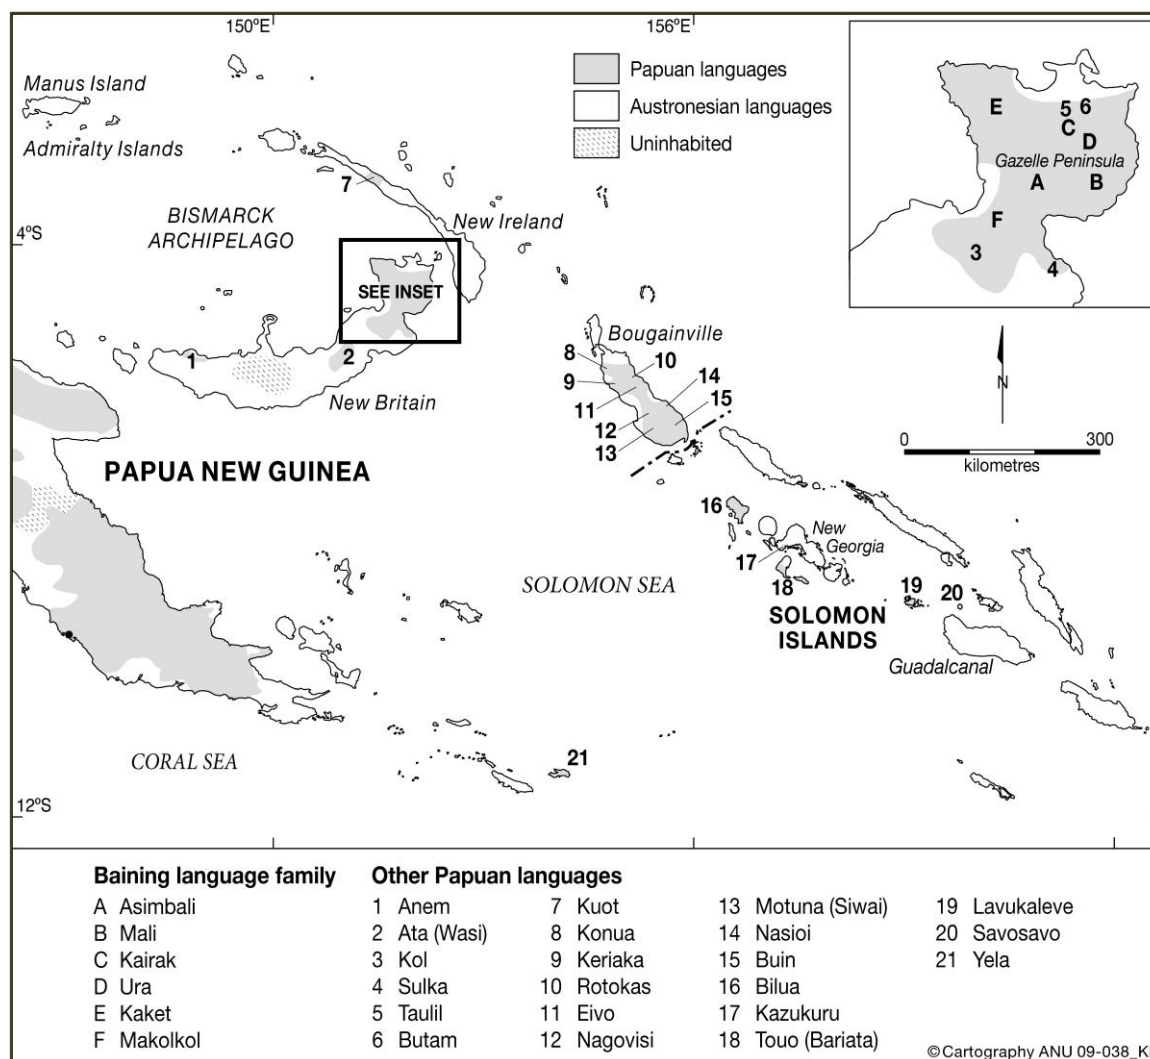

After a new Mali word and its translation had been identified and recorded on a card, and any relevant morphological information had been noted, Ms Julien Tayul wrote an example sentence in Mali for each sense listed on the card. Towards the end of the fieldtrip, several other people, and particularly Mr Tayul, assisted in this work, either writing sentences in Mali or assisting me with the task of translating the examples. This method had the advantage of allowing direct contributions from a wider group of people.

All of the material I collected was transferred to the software Shoebox (later updated to Toolbox) once I returned from the field in late 2002. Since that time I have continued to add entries and revise them for publication, adding new information as the analysis of the grammar progressed, filling in missing example sentences with extracts from texts, reorganising the entries into a more logical structure, coding for semantic domains in order to produce the thesaurus, and so on. I was also able to consult with Mr Tayul late in 2006 on some outstanding problems with the grammatical analysis and the material in the dictionary and, at the same time, we added a few more entries.

1.2 About the Mali language

Mali is a member of the Baining language family. The language is spoken in roughly the south east quadrant of the Gazelle Peninsula on the island of New Britain (Papua New Guinea). See Map 1.

Map 1: Area map of East Papuan languages

At this time there are around 2200 speakers of Mali living in eleven villages across Mali territory or in nearby villages and towns (see Map 2). There are two dialects of Mali: a coastal dialect whose speakers are called Abilta ‘those from the old village’ and a mountain dialect whose speakers are called Arongda ‘those from a cold place’. The dictionary includes words from both dialects. Differences between them are most apparent at the level of phonology with Abilta speakers showing more phonological reduction than Arongda speakers and inserting epenthetic consonants in word final position after concordial pronouns.

1.3 Vitality of Mali

Only the oldest generation of Mali speakers (50 or more years of age) is fully fluent in Mali; able to use it in all domains without ad hoc borrowings from Tok Pisin. These people are the only ones with a thorough knowledge of Mali ethnobiology and cosmology. The next generation (30–49 years of age) is fully fluent in Tok Pisin as a result of time spent at boarding school and the increasing need for linguistic accommodation within villages. They habitually speak Tok Pisin in many contexts but are generally also fluent in Mali. Younger adults (16–29 years of age) show even more restricted vocabularies. Children (2–15 years of age) who are born to two Mali parents learn Mali as their first language; however, they do not acquire extensive Mali vocabularies. Children are fully fluent in Tok Pisin by the middle of primary school.

1.4 Word class labels used in this dictionary

Cross-references in this section refer the reader to relevant sections of the Mali (Baining) grammar where additional information about each category may be found.

Verbs (sa-vi.) (vi-so.) (vt.)	Verbs head the predicate and are associated with concordial pronouns that cross-reference the person, number, and gender of core grammatical arguments (§4.1). Most verbs show stem initial mutations for tense (§4.2). Verbs do not take any of the morphology associated with nouns (i.e. specifier articles or noun class marking) and they may not function as the head of an NP. Within the dictionary verbs are labelled to show their argument structure. There are three possibilities: (sa-vi.) indicates an active intransitive verb with a single argument marked before the verb. Examples include: bang ‘run’, dang ‘catch fire’, gum ‘cough’, tusavus ‘wriggle’, and vanim ‘roll’ (vi-so.) indicates a stative intransitive verb with a single argument after the verb. Examples include: bubu ‘be dull in colour’, disse ‘faint’, irēs ‘feel sad’, and mēnap ‘sleep’ (vt.) indicates a transitive verb with two arguments. Examples include: bias ‘step on’, don ‘throw away’, kēthep ‘catch, grab’, pais ‘bind’, and tal ‘carry’. Mutations for tense be ascertained by checking for variant forms at the end of each main entry. Each variant form is listed in a minor entry. There are three patterns of mutation: Type A verbs: don go.in.PRES, mon go.in.PAST, and thon go.in.FUT Type B verbs: don thow.away.PRES, thon thow.away.NPRES Type C verbs: tlu see.PRES, lu see.NPRES Type D verbs: su try.NI (non-inflecting)
Nouns (n.)	Nouns head noun phrases (§10) and take noun class marking (§8). Nouns also take the specifier article in many contexts (§10.4). This is sometimes indicated by stem initial mutation (§3.4.1.A). Nouns may occur as copula complements. Information about the relationship of nouns to specifier articles is incorporated into the entries. Variant forms are listed as minor entries. The specifier article is a proclitic that generally cliticises to the head of the NP. All nouns may occur with or without the specifier article. For a number of words, the specifier article is part of the citation form and is presented here as part of the headword. In other cases the use of the specifier article is not considered by speakers to be part of the citation form and is not included in the head word. In addition to this, the specifier article triggers phonological changes when it precedes a voiceless stop. For example the noun athinēmga can be analysed as follows: {a=thinēm-ka SPEC=fish-M.SG}. Approximately one third of all common nouns have the specifier article as part of their citation form; for example, [aruɣa] ‘man’ {a=ru-cha SPEC=person-M.SG}. Nouns whose stems begin in voiceless stops show the presence of the specifier as a stem initial mutation. That is, the specifier article a= is not overtly present on nouns beginning in /p/, /t/, /k/. Instead, these stems show an initial mutation reflecting the phonological rule for intervocalic lenition described in the grammar in §3.4.1.A. Thus, the noun chēthopki is the surface form of {a=kēthop-ki SPEC=pool-F.SG}. This is reflected in the way nouns are organised in the dictionary; for nouns with citation forms containing overt specifier articles or lenition triggered by an underlying article, the bare form of the noun is listed as a variant form. Nouns that do not show lenition of the stem are generally given only in their citation form. The distribution of the specifier article is described in more detail in the grammar in §10.4.

Also included in the entries is information about the plural form of the noun. Singular nouns are given as citation forms. In Mali, the singular and dual are the marked numbers. For example the nouns athinēmga {a=thinēm-ka SPEC=fish-M.SG} ‘(one) fish’ and arucha ‘man’ {a=ru-cha SPEC=person-M.SG} both take masculine singular noun class marking and have the dual forms athinēmiom {a=thinēm-iom SPEC=fish-M.DL} ‘two fish’ and aruiom ‘two men’ {a=ru-iom SPEC=person-M.DL}. Generally speaking, plural human nouns are marked with the human plural noun class marker -ta. Non-human count nouns do not take plural marking; rather, the unmarked form can (but does not necessarily) encode plural athinēm {a=thinēm SPEC=fish} ‘(one or more) fish’. That is to say, in some contexts a noun without singular noun class marking may still be understood as singular. This is discussed in more detail in the grammar in §8.6 on markedness patterns in the noun class marking system. While most unmarked nouns have forms identical to the stem of a noun class marked singular form, a small number of nouns have different forms when the noun class marking is absent. For example, the noun chuar {a=kaur SPEC=vein} ‘vein(s)’ has the singular form churacha {a=kur-ka SPEC=vein-M.SG} ‘(one vein)’. These alternations can be identified by consulting the plural field in the entry.

Adjectives (adj.) (num.) (quant.)	The class of adjectives in Mali includes some numerals and quantifiers as distinctive subclasses. Like nouns, adjectives may take the specifier article. Where this is part of the citation form or where the citation form has stem initial lenition reflecting the presence of a specifier article, this is the form used as a headword in the dictionary and the bare form is listed as a variant. The only distinctive characteristic of this class is the tendency for reduplication of the root to encode intensification.
Adverbs (adv.)	Two types of adverbs have been identified in Mali, distinguished by their distribution. Clause level adverbs encode temporal distinctions and occur at the periphery of the sentence (see §14.1 and §18.1). Manner adverbs modify the predicate and occur in predicate final position. They are discussed in more detail in the grammar in §13.2. The two types of adverbs can be distinguished by consulting the example sentences associated with each entry. A handful of manner adverbs with more epistemic meanings also occur in clause initial position as discourse markers (see §5.2.10.B and §14.2.2).
Prepositions (prep.)	Prepositional phrases occur at the periphery of the clause or within an NP. They are used to introduce NPs typically expressing temporal relations and locations at clause level and, within the NP, they introduce location terms (see §7 and §10.6). Prepositions also have an important role in derivational processes in Mali. This is discussed in the grammar in §7.4–§7.5. There are both simple and morphologically complex prepositions. The morphologically simple prepositions form clitic groups with an article, if one is present, or with a pronoun. Complex prepositions are generally independent phonological words.
Directionals (dir.)	Directionals occur in a paradigm based on orientation, involving the vertical ‘up’ and ‘down’ and horizontal ‘across’ axes and the type of relation involved (abstract, landform, terminal end point, general direction). They have a similar distribution to prepositional phrases and adverbial demonstratives expressing location, usually occurring in clause-final position. Directionals also differ from prepositions in not taking NP complements. Directionals are discussed in detail in the grammar in §12.
Pronouns (pro.)	There are three series of pronouns that may head an NP: (A) anaphoric pronouns, (B) interrogative pronouns, and (C) indefinite pronouns. Each series follows the noun class system and distinguish three numbers (singular, dual, and plural). Concordial pronouns and the possessive pronouns follow the gender system. There are three classes of concordial pronouns (classes I, II, and

	III). Classes I and II participate in tense marking (see §4.2 in the grammar). Associative pronouns are required when NPs are coordinated; they are based on a mixture of the class II and class III concordial pronouns and the associative particle nē (see §5.2.4.A in the grammar for more information). Contrastive possessive pronouns come in a range of forms, including clitic groups that also contain indefinite articles. These are discussed in §11 of the grammar.
Demonstratives (dem.)	Mali has the following types of demonstratives: proximate nominal demonstratives, distal nominal demonstratives, contrastive nominal demonstratives, indefinite nominal demonstratives, and adverbial demonstratives encoding time, manner, and direction (distal and proximate forms). Nominal demonstratives encode the noun class of the head noun and distinguish three numbers (singular, dual, and plural). In addition to the basic forms of the demonstratives, each paradigm shows an emphatic and an abbreviated set of forms. The distribution and functions of demonstratives are set out in the grammar in §10.5.
Determiners (np art.) (spec art.)	Determiners in Mali include a set of NP articles and the specifier article a=. These forms are discussed in more detail in the grammar in §10.3 and §10.4 respectively.
Markers of aspect and status (modal.) (neg.) (interrog.)	This category covers a diverse range of forms that are used in the expression of aspect, modality, and illocutionary force in Mali. This includes: modality distinctions encoded within the predicate; particles for encoding negation; and words for encoding interrogatives. Additional discourse markers that encode epistemic distinctions are discussed in the grammar in §5.2.10.
Clause combining morphology (rel.) (coord.) (subord.)	There are three different sets of clause-linking devices in Mali: relators, coordinators, and subordinators (see §16–§17 in the grammar for details).
Interjections (interj.)	Interjections occur as independent utterances, particularly in spontaneous speech.
Discourse markers (disc.)	Discourse markers fall into one of three groups based on their form and distribution. This is discussed in §14.2 of the grammar. All discourse markers occur in clause-initial position. Negators and the negative imperative are formally subclasses of discourse markers. They are also discussed in §15 of the grammar.

1.5 Note on the orthography

The orthography used in this dictionary was developed by members of the Mali community. It has been used in the Mali (Baining) Grammar and Texts, as well as in a number of publications within the community. Mali graphemes and their corresponding phones are listed in Table 3.13. Note that the velar nasal [ŋ] <ng> is distinguished from an alveolar nasal, followed by a velar stop [ŋg] by the insertion of an apostrophe <n'g>.

Table 3.13: Graphemes in the current Mali orthography

Bilabial	Alveolar	Palatal	Velar	Vowels	Diphthongs
/β/ <v>	/ɹ/ <th>	/j/ <y>	/ɣ/ <ch>	/i/ 	/ɔi/ <oi>
/p/ 	/t/ <t>		/k/ <k>	/ɛ/ <e>	/ai/ <ai>
/b/ 	/d/ <d>		/g/ <g>	/ə/ <ē>	/au/ <au>
/m/ <m>	/n/ <n>		/ŋ/ <ng>	/ɔ/ <o>
	/s/ <s>			/u/
	/r/ <r>

See §3 of the Mali Grammar for more information about the phonetics and phonology of the language. Given the highly productive nature of some phonological processes in Mali, it is not surprising that writers vary in the way they represent Mali.

1.6 Ordering of entries

The entries in the dictionary are organised in alphabetical order. The graphemes <e> and <ē> are ordered together and the digraphs <ng> and <th> are sorted after <n> and <t> respectively. The spaces between words in compounds, phrasal verbs and other multi-word lexemes are ignored in sequencing of entries. Polysemous words that belong to different parts of speech are generally treated as distinct head words. Words that are related from a Mali perspective (e.g. vēlēngi 'large pig' and a species of fish that appears to have a snout of the same name) are treated as different senses of a single lexeme. If there are morphological differences between two uses of a stem then these two uses are treated as different entries, following the principle that different categories of polysemous stems are treated differently. Thus, nouns with distinct plural forms are treated as different entries (e.g. chavatka 'adulterer' and 'bad spirit' with the plurals chavatta and chavat respectively). There are also examples of pairs where in one case the specifier article is treated by speakers as part of the citation form (for example chēthopka 'pool') but another meaning of the same stem does not use the specifier article in the citation form (for example kēthopka 'sap'). These are treated as distinct entries because they have different citation forms.

Note that in the English to Mali section of the dictionary there are a small number of Tok Pisin words included because they are common in PNG English and a Standard International English translation is not readily predictable for these words, for example achuithēm (Mali) or mumu (TP) is translated in the dictionary as ‘earth oven’ but this is not an expression used within the Mali community. These entries in the English to Mali section are indicated by single quotation marks around the Tok Pisin term and the label (TP) following. For example, ‘mumu’ (TP).

The organisation of the thesaurus is described at the beginning of that section.

1.7 Structure of the entries

Four sample entries from the dictionary are presented here. Each main entry contains a series of fields (marked here with numbers) that are described in the list below. Fairly extensive entries have been chosen so that all the relevant fields within a record can be shown. Many of the entries within the dictionary are simpler than the ones illustrated here but are organised along the same principles. Minor entries showing variant forms contain only the Mali word and an English translation. The English to Mali section can be used to identify the main entry for the word concerned.

avēchit¹ *dem.*² that large one⁴ Gram Note: Extended singular distal demonstrative.⁶ Amēngia avēchit ba ngo iva ngu thal ngiat sēva bang.⁷ Bring that tall tree to me so that I can carry it home.⁸ Variant: vēchit.¹²

Entries within the dictionary are organised as follows:

1. Headword: The Mali word at the head of the entry. Where there are different inflectional possibilities, this is typically the singular form of a noun or the present tense form of a verb.
2. Part of speech: The part of speech label, selected from the list presented above. Where the same word occurs as different parts of speech, these are included as separate entries. For example, the word *tne*n appears twice because there are two ways in which it is used. As a transitive verb it means ‘ask’ and as an active intransitive verb it means ‘pray’.
3. Sense number: If a word has multiple senses, a number is assigned to each sense.

4. English Gloss: Possible translations of the Mali word into English are provided.
5. Usage note: Any additional information that may assist the reader's understanding of the word is included here.
6. Grammar note: Where a grammatical word that is not readily translated into English occurs, it may have a description included here.
7. Example sentence: An example sentence in Mali has been included wherever possible for illustrative purposes.
8. Translation of sentence: An English translation of the sentence is also provided.
9. Morphological analysis: For some more complex Mali words, a morphological analysis is provided.
10. English Gloss: English glosses are provided for the morphological analyses.
11. Plural form: The plural forms of nouns are generally listed here.
12. Variant form: As described above, there are alternate forms. Verbs vary to reflect tense and nouns vary depending on the presence of the specifier article. These alternate forms are included here. Variant forms for other words, for example, phonologically reduced forms, are also presented here.
13. Borrowing: If the word has been identified as a borrowing, the source, form, and language are included here.
14. See also: If another Mali word is very similar to the headword, it is mentioned here. The English gloss is also provided.
15. Inflectional note: Other inflectional information is provided here.

1.8 Note on the translation of the example sentences

Four particular issues relating to the translation of the example sentences are worth noting here. In each case they concern difficulties in rendering the Mali into English.

Firstly, as we noted above, the singular and dual are marked numbers in Mali, while a noun stem with no noun class marking can be read as plural. Entities that are less salient in the discourse can be presented as a bare stem and read as singular. There are a few nouns that take singular noun class marking but refer to something that, strictly speaking, is plural in English. For example, vrsetki 'marks' refers to a small set of marks (for example, a place where an animal has been and left marks) rather than necessarily referring to a single mark. In addition, the Mali convention when referring to a generic class is to use a singular noun, whereas in English the convention is to use a plural noun. Where following the convention of using a singular noun leads to a loss of the generic reading, the English translation keeps a plural referent.

Secondly, Mali has several large sets of demonstratives that inflect for noun class. The glosses for these demonstratives are written to clearly reflect the noun class values and the pragmatic significance of the demonstratives, but these glosses are not generally used in the translation of related examples sentences as the amount of information involved creates confusing translations.

Thirdly, a number of differences between the semantics of tense marking in English and Mali have led to fairly frequent issues with translating the example sentences provided here. This is due to the fact that Mali uses past tense in many contexts where there is an overlap with the present at the same time as present tense in English is strongly associated with habitual type readings.

In general, I have tried to reflect grammatical value of tense of the Mali sentence in the English sentence as far as possible but where the resulting English sentence sounds odd (for example reads as a habitual where none was intended) then I have made use of other strategies. On the whole, the main strategy in the latter cases has been to translate into the most semantically neutral tense in English. Because the plain present tense is so often associated with other meanings — such as the habitual, I have often made use of the past tense in this context. In some cases another strategy was used. For activity verbs, in the present tense I sometimes use the progressive. In the case of stative past tense verbs like mair ‘wait’ where there is no implication that the event is complete, I have sometimes used the present tense in English where the original Mali sentence was actually in the past.

In order to determine the original tense of the example sentences then, the reader would have to identify the verb for and the form of an A/SA pronoun and work out the tense marking. See also §4.2 from the grammar.

Finally, there are quite different principles in Mali and English for determining the distribution of the additive coordinator da ‘and’ and the contrastive coordinator dak ‘but’. In English ‘but’ is used for situations that are counter expectation, whereas in Mali this form is used primarily to signal a change in the key participants or the perspective that is being given of them. Since using the literal translation was causing problems for early readers of the dictionary, I have chosen the more idiomatic English option where confusion may arise.
